Brief details.

I was waiting at the red stop light in the right lane along Jalan Bukit Merah, with my foot on the brake pedal. I suddenly felt a nudge from behind and felt my car had moved forward. I thought that I had mistakenly shifted my foot from the brake to the accelerator pedal. I looked up and saw a white lorry. I panicked and pressed what I thought was the brake pedal hard. It was unfortunately the accelerator. This caused my car to lurch forward and impact into the the back of the lorry. I was in shock and remained in my vehicle for a minute - I began to cry. I then saw the lorry door open; an Indian man, who appeared to be in his 30s, approached me. I put the breakdown lights on and turned off my engine to come out of my car. The lorry driver asked me if I was okay. He then said that a car had hit me from behind; and asked me to check on it. I was still dazed and crying- but I walked to the back of my car. By then, the cars behind my car had already started filtering out into the adjoining lane and some had driven off. I could not be sure which was the vehicle that had nudged my car. The lorry driver then surveyed the back of his vehicle and informed me that as there were no damages to his lorry, he would not be making any claim and he proceeded to drive off. We did not exchange details. I am making this report for record purpose as advised by my mother's car insurance company (the car is registered under my mother's name).
