Dear Nor,

We refer to the subject. To date, our insured did not furnish us any PIR.

We have a similar case with CDGE (ref : TP/2066196142SG/ SLQ4888Y/ 09/12/2017) In this particular case, our insured vehicle was in-front and our driver abruptly braked causing the taxi to hit our insured vehicle from the rear. We rejected CDGE's claim based on BOLA 27 head-to-rear and TP appealed citing precedent high court case as follows:

"You may refer to a similar High Court case, Tong Khing Kia & Anor v Yeo Kong Boon [1991] 2 MLJ 101: High Court found the front car driver 100% liable for creating a dangerous situation which was the cause of the accident. Chao Hick Tin J (as he then was) added that "it does not follow that in the case of a front-to-rear collision, the vehicle that followed behind must necessarily be negligent to some extent".

In view of this, we have settled TP claim.

Now, for ref: 3491272485SG , it was the taxi (in-front) who made a series of attempt to brake and made an abrupt braking causing our insured to hit TP from behind. We would like to apply the cited precedent by CDGE that "the front car driver 100% liable for creating a dangerous situation which was the cause of the accident. It does not follow that in the case of a front-to-rear collision, the vehicle that followed behind must necessarily be negligent to some extent".

Kindly let us have your view and opinion whether we are to deny liability based on the above.

Thank you.
