Brief Details.

I have just returned back to Singapore not too long ago & received 2 letters from Traffic Police indicating a reported traffic accident as per incident reference. I previously lodged a report online, but it seems that it did not go through. Now, I also just received 2 more letters (1 via Registered Article).

I needed to recall this occurrence if I could, and it has to be the incident of the slight bump with a taxi's side mirror. So I was en route to a funeral prayer at Hajjah Fatimah mosque that evening, and I was running slightly late already. Understandably, due to not being able to make it on time, I rode without possible slowdowns (within the speed limits) whilst weaving through traffic as smoothly as possible. At the said location of the incident (along Jalan Sultan), I do recall that there was this modified car behind me, on my left from the traffic light junction (between North Bridge Road & Jalan Sultan). I could hear its engines revving loudly and saw it accelerating from the junction, having glanced at my left side mirror. With that in sight, I instinctively kept to the right side of my lane, thinking it was going to speed past me. I knew there was this taxi ahead on the next lane (on the right), and with my judgment, it wouldn't be possible for me to come in contact with the taxi. The taxi was moving considerably slow, as if it were going to move out of its lane, but I just kept going, as I was already in a rush.

Instantaneously, my focus was on that modified car on my left, which eventually turned off before where I was. At that point of time, I felt like the taxi was a bit close to me, but since it was moving relatively slower, I couldn't swerve cleanly out of the way, to completely avoid it. Its side mirror definitely clashed with my handlebar. It wasn't audibly noticeable for me, at that point, but I believe I did raise my hand to the driver on the move. I know I did not bother to stop or something (if the taxi driver was expecting it), but I had pressing priorities at that point of time.

I can understand that the taxi driver would be adamant on complaining, as it is not his own vehicle, but regardless, I am sure that there are many a times that a motorbike's handlebar comes in contact with side mirrors on the road. And yes, most of the time at junctions. But never once would I expect a police report to be made though.

All in all, I apologize for causing panic and trouble for the taxi driver, but I hope and believe there was no damage at that point of time.

This is all I have detailed for your consideration and understanding. Thank you and my apologies for such inconveniences.
