I was driving down Grange Road (in the "upwards" direction according to the map I have drawn) at 8.12am at a normal speed. I passed traffic lights "A" (in the diagram) as it was green and just as it was turning amber, and was crossing the yellow box at the T-junction when the car in front of me jammed his breaks suddenly.

When I spoke to the driver of the car (Mr Tien) after the accident, he said that he jammed the breaks because the traffic lights "B" turned red as he was reaching the end of the yellow box. However, the point to stop when the lights turned red should be at area "C" (as drawn in my diagram) before traffic lights "A", and certainly not at the yellow box (before traffic lights "B") in the middle of a T-junction!!

Because the car in front of me came to such a sudden halt at such an unexpected place to stop, although I was driving at a normal speed and maintained a safe distance behind him, I unfortunately could not stop my car in time and hence bumped into his rear bumper.
